

YEARS OF BRINGING INSTITUTIONS TOGETHER

In 2013, higher education stakeholders came together to streamline regulations around distance education programs with State Authorization Reciprocity Agreements (SARA). NC-SARA helps states, students, institutions, and policymakers understand the benefits of participating in SARA. Today, more than 2,200 institutions voluntarily participate in SARA. The SARA Source works to help guide students toward programs within these participating institutions.

A SEARCHABLE SPECIAL

SARA Source contains distance education program information for all SARA-participating institutions. This provides assurance that programs are of the highest quality, meet student consumer protection standards, and have easily accessible program information such as tuition and fees, instruction type, average time to degree completion, and much more. Various filters allow students to further refine their search to a select set of criteria that are most important for their educational goals.

- Our searchable national catalog gives an elegant method of researching potential distance education programs across the country
- Seamlessly create lists of programs with our favorites tool
- Easily compare programs side-by-side
- Specify location, subject area, and degree type to begin finding the programs that best fit your needs!

ALL QUESTIONS ANSWERED

SARA Source seeks to eliminate the bureaucratic roadblocks that have made looking for education programs so difficult in the past. Our source will help you confidently, and easily, answer questions like:

- Does the program have the proper approvals?
- How will learning take place and who will teach courses?
- How much am I expected to spend in tuition and fees?
- How long will it take to gain my degree?

At NC-SARA, we are focused day-in and day-out on identifying opportunities to make distance education programs better for states, institutions, and, most importantly, students.
